

Andrea-Rosalinde Hofer joined the OECD in 2004 as policy analyst in the Local Economic and Employment Development programme – LEED. Andrea has been advancing OECD work on the role of universities in new venture creation. Part of this is a Criteria List of Good Practice that universities can use as a tool to self-assess and re-orient their current entrepreneurship education and start-up support provision. Andrea participated in more than twenty international review teams that analysed local entrepreneurship support systems. She co/authored several OECD reports, working papers and book chapters on projects on local governance, entrepreneurship and innovation and international migration. Before joining the OECD, Andrea was a researcher and project manager at the University of Federal Armed Forces in Munich, and the United Nations (UNDP and UNODC). She holds MA degrees in Political Science (LMU Munich) and Agricultural Engineering (TU Munich), and is International Women's University/ifu alumna.
